GENERAL ORDERS.

QUEEN'S REGULATIONS.

A.O. 163.—Marches.

The following will be substituted for paras. 13 to 25, Section XVI., of the Queen's Regulations, 1894:—

"13. No armed party consisting of 20 men or more is to be allowed to proceed on any duty unaccompanied by an officer. All detachments of cavalry of 50 men or upwards are to be attended by a farrier or qualified shoeing-smith. Whenever armed parties are called out for the performance of any unusual duties, commanding officers are personally to ascertain that the officers in charge are fully acquainted with all orders and directions that bear on the service they may be called upon to perform.

14. Troops on home service are to be practised in route marching from the 15th October to the 15th March. The marches will be progressive, beginning with 9 miles and gradually increasing the distance to 16 miles. As a rule the shorter marches will be made in marching order, but commanding officers may use their discretion in excusing young soldiers from carrying their valises. Monday should usually be fixed as the day for route marching. Should the march be prevented by bad weather, or by other reason, it is to be made on the day following; in no case is there to be less than one march a week. Every available soldier is to be in the ranks. When the march exceeds 12 miles each man should carry a biscuit in his haversack.

Besides marches made under regimental arrangements, general officers commanding will, whenever they can, practise combined marches, and endeavour to render these marches effective and instructive both to officers and men.

No regimental parade should be allowed more than 15 minutes at the most before the hour for marching off, and when troops are practised in marching in brigade, units should not be brought together, but should be ordered to pass, at a fixed hour, a specified spot so selected as to obviate any unit diverging from its direct track.

15. Advance and rear-guards will invariably be formed according to the principles laid down in 'Infantry drill.' The rear-guard will bring on all men who have become separated from their corps through falling out or any other cause.

16. Halts should be made half-an-hour after the force marches and afterwards once an hour for 5 minutes. When the duration of the march is likely to exceed six hours, it is advisable to halt on the way for a meal, but as a rule the men should have dinner after arrival. Officers should avoid halting in places where the men are likely to get chilled.

17. The greatest attention should be paid by commanding officers and officers commanding companies to the state and proper fitting of the men's boots; especial care being taken that boys and growing lads are not allowed to wear boots of too small a size. General and other officers should let their commands, without being called to attention, defile before them from time to time during a march, in order that they may personally observe the general condition of the men and ensure notes being made of the names of those who march with difficulty or whose boots are in bad order. Unless other orders are given, troops on the march should be called to attention the first time only that they pass near the officer in command.

18. The hour of marching will mainly depend on the object to be fulfilled, but due consideration must also be given to the climate, the season of the year, and the distance to be traversed. As a general rule the men will breakfast before marching, and the march should commence about an hour after daybreak. Mounted services should not start earlier, save under necessity, on account of the feeding of the horses and the difficulty of properly adjusting saddlery and harness in the dark. It may, however, be desirable to march much earlier, or during the night.

19. The first duty of soldiers after a march, is to attend to their arms, clothing, equipment, and horses, and until these are in complete order they will not be permitted to leave their camp or quarters. In the infantry an evening roll call for inspection of the men's feet should take place whenever practicable.

20. When troops are billeted, the officer who draws the billets is to arrange that the men of each section or company are kept together, and that their officers are quartered as near to them as possible. An alarm post or place of assembly for the several units of the force will be selected and made known to the troops daily before they break off. When soldiers on the march are quartered in barracks instead of being billeted, and there is no available accommodation in the barracks for their officers, billets for the officers should be drawn on the route, as hotel expenses will not be allowed. The billeting parties which proceed in advance of the unit on the march should not be billeted with the main body on the last night before the end of the march, but should, after drawing billets for the unit for that night, go on to their destination.

21. Commanding officers will see that small parties or individual soldiers, detached on any service, are provided with sufficient money to pay charges for billets or subsistence for themselves and for any prisoners travelling under their escort; and non-commissioned officers in charge of such small parties, as well as soldiers travelling singly, will be held responsible for the payment of their billets before leaving, as required by the Army Act. On arrival at a military station on temporary duty, non-commissioned officers and men of all corps are to be attached to the troops for quarters and rations.

22. When a medical officer is temporarily attached to a mounted unit for duty on the line of march, the commanding officer is to provide him with a troop horse. A billet is to be drawn for him as in the case of regimental officers.

23. The exemption of troops under Sec. 143 of the Army Act, from the payment of tolls, only applies to tolls established by Act of Parliament, and does not exempt troops from fees charged by private owners for permission to pass over their bridges or lands. Commanding officers can always ascertain whether a toll is authorised by Parliament, by referring to the board at the gate."
